BACK TO SCHOOL

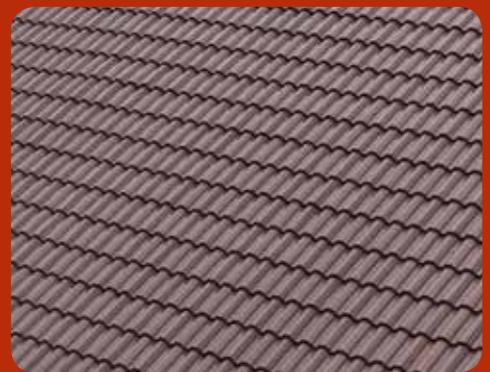

Redland's Regent tiles and components were selected for the second time by a primary school in Milton Keynes when they wanted to match the roof of an extension to the original building.

Germander Park School was built in the 70's which makes it one of the first primary schools to be built in the then newly formed town of Milton Keynes. During construction of the original school building, Redland's Regent tiles were chosen for the roof covering. With that same roof still going strong decades later, the decision was made to use the same tiles for the extension.

Due to a growing deficit in the number of school placements available in Milton Keynes, Germander Park School wanted to add two more classrooms opening up an additional 45 places for the local children.

Roofing Contractor at Russell Roofing, Lee Roberts said: "We were asked to match the roof tiles with the rest of the building, since the original roof had lasted so well and still looked good, we decided to go back to Redland and use the Regent again. The project took a week in total and used 180sqm of Regent tiles along with monoridge and cloaked verge tiles. Having used Redland's tiles on a number of jobs in the past, I find them very easy to work with and will often recommend them to a client."

Regent tiles are best known for their durability over extended periods of time whilst maintaining a visually strong aesthetic. Additionally, they are ideal for use on extensions as they can be laid at pitches as low as 12.5°

Characterised by their high, bold roll profile and manufactured with a choice of through-coloured or granular finishes in nine different colours, the Regent tile offers flexibility and compatibility to suit all roof types. Due to its low pitch capability, Regent can be specified for roofing designs with a pitch as low as 12.5°
